

Larkin Is Out Of Tombs Again Under New Bond

Seized on Release From Prison on Reasonable Doubt Writ, Another Warrant Is Served on Agitator

Women Loyal to Him One Regards Him as Genius, but Bomb Squad Detectives Take Different View

James Larkin Jr., forty-two years old, Irish agitator and labor leader, released from Great Meadow prison where he was serving a term for criminal anarchy, and re-arrested and sent to the Tombs, was released for the second time at 2 o'clock yesterday morning and was still at liberty last night. Two bench warrants from the Federal District Court, charging violation of the immigration laws, were not served on Larkin, although they had been left with the warden of the Tombs.

It is held by attorneys for Larkin that the three warrants which were obtained by the police in their efforts to keep Larkin in jail, in spite of the certificate of nonculpability issued by the Federal District Court, were void. Larkin, who served under the name of James Larkin, was released on a writ of habeas corpus. He was released on a writ of habeas corpus. He was released on a writ of habeas corpus.

Friends Loyal to Larkin

Lieutenant James Gagan, of the bomb squad, who obtained the three warrants in an effort to keep Larkin in jail and who had been on Larkin's trail since he was released from Great Meadow, had made no attempt to re-arrest Larkin up to late last night. It was said at Police Headquarters that other warrants may be served on Larkin today.

Larkin had rented a room in an apartment house at 313 East Street and went to his room immediately upon his release yesterday morning. He was accompanied by attorney William O'Brien, who was said to be a wealthy woman in Schenectady, whose name is withheld. This woman, it was said yesterday by friends of Larkin, shared with Larkin the money which was used to buy the house in which he was a partner whose writings should be turned to confiscate.

Willing to Quit Country

The police, however, have entirely different views regarding Larkin. Larkin had written a letter to his wife and three sons in Ireland and had then left for an all-day auto run into the country.

When Larkin was released from Great Meadow prison on Friday, when bail of $15,000 was furnished by Mrs. Charles Brooks, of New York City, besides Mrs. Brooks, it was said that Larkin was willing to leave the country.

Glued-On Bathing Suit Slips As Ocean Slaps Village Art

Futuristic Beach Costume Accidentally Gets Wet at Coney, Stitches Go "Z-Z-Z-Zut" and Shirley Screams Loudly for Her Bathrobe

By Robert B. Peck

As a meddler Charlotte Le Blanc is one of the best sculptresses in Greenwich Village, take it from Shirley Lewis, who, herself, is one of the most talented cartoonists of the Village who ever pulled a publicity stunt at Coney Island on a Sunday afternoon in May. If ever Charles designs another bathing suit for Shirley, somebody else is going to stitch it together.

It was a stunning suit. Anybody who was on the beach at the Atlantic Baths, near the foot of West Eighth Street, Coney Island, yesterday afternoon will admit that. They were all stunned when Shirley handed her bathrobe to Charles and fainted at the ocean.

They were not so stunned, however, as to be unable to crowd around Shirley. It was a bathing costume that wasn't effective at long range or even from a few feet. It was a bathing costume that was a publicity stunt. It was a bathing costume that was a publicity stunt.

A Futuristic Triumph

Never before many did inspect the costume of the beach. The costume was a bathing suit. It was a bathing suit. It was a bathing suit.

The costume itself was a triumph. It was a bathing suit. It was a bathing suit. It was a bathing suit.

It was a bathing suit. It was a bathing suit. It was a bathing suit.

It was a bathing suit. It was a bathing suit. It was a bathing suit.

Detectives See Big Shake-Up in Enright Orders

Commissioner Calls for Personal Survey of All Men in Dept. to Ascertain Fitness: Drive for Convictions

By Robert B. Peck

Impulse of a far-reaching shake-up in the detective division of the Police Department was discussed yesterday, following issuance of two special orders at Police Headquarters by Commissioner Enright. It was said the plans call for a widespread reorganization to go into effect within a week.

Both orders were received by Inspector John D. Connelley, in charge of detectives. A summary of the information sought by Commissioner Enright is said to indicate dissatisfaction with work of the force in apprehending the convicted crime wave.

The first order directs that Inspector Connelley begin an immediate survey of his force, such survey to estimate in a report to be laid before the Commissioner before May 12. It is to cover the respective qualifications, fitness, physical status, achievements and potentialities of each of his men, more particularly those drawing salaries as first grade detectives.

The second order notifies Inspector Connelley to communicate with every detective who had made an arrest in a major crime on May 6, 7 or 8, to have them appear at District Attorney Banton's office with all witnesses involved in cases where arrests have been made or are about to be made.
